EDITOR'S NOTEBOOK

Dear Archie Readers,

It seems that there has been much debate about how students should dress for school. There are those educators who feel that children should be dressed comfortably when in class. If you look a little sloppy or dress a little on the wild side, so what? Why worry so much about clothes when you need to concentrate on learning? But isn't being concerned about your appearance part of learning? Also, dressing in outlandish outfits could be distracting to other students. Another problem might be between students that can afford expensive clothing and those who cannot. You go to school to learn, not to compete in a fashion show. One very popular solution to the "dress code" issue is "UNIFORMS." If everyone wore a uniform to school, it would solve all of the above mentioned problems. However, solutions do not come easy and the debate goes on. And it goes on in RIVERDALE HIGH.....

Next month Archie and his friends must deal with the hot topic of having to wear a uniform to school. The school uniform debate unravels in a three-issue crossover starting with JUGHEAD #100 (definitely a collector's item). In the opening episode, Jughead's individuality is put to the test when mandatory school uniforms are proposed. Can he count on his friends to support his cause, or will their friendships come to a tragic end? The saga continues in ARCHIE #467 and concludes in BETTY #57. This story, torn from the headlines of school newspapers everywhere, was written by the talented Kathleen Webb, with artwork by the professor of pencils, Stan Goldberg and the nocturnal Rex Lindsey. Inking embellishments contributed by Henry Scarpelli, Mike Esposito and Rich Koslowski, with color by Barry Grossman.

What are your opinions on school uniforms?

The Milk Snake

The milk snake is a type of kingsnake that farmers once believed took milk from cows. Today, scientists know that no snake is physically able to take milk from a cow, but any snake might drink milk from a pail because of the milk's water content. There are many sub-species of milk snakes. The best known is the eastern milk snake. The milk snake eats lizards and rodents and that is why it is valuable to farmers. They often go into barnyards to hunt for rodents that nest there.

The eastern milk snake may be four feet long and is gray with dark-bordered chestnut blotches on the back and sides. The ones found in western and southern United States have a pattern of blotches of red-dish-orange, black, white or yellow.

Ice Hockey

Ice hockey is a sport played by two teams of 6 players wearing ice skates on a rectangular surface of ice called a rink. Each team attempts to hit a puck made of hard rubber into one of the two goals situated at opposite ends of the rink. Players use a stick with a curved blade at one end to drive the puck forward. Ice hockey has traditionally been a cold weather sport, and Canada and the former Soviet Union have been the two countries with the greatest number of active players.
